

Vision: "It's about the discovery, not the exact match"

Problems

I've seen a pair of shoes I love, and I want to buy them, but...

I don't know where to get them (or similar)

Solution

I should be able to tell you what I'm looking for.

You should return for me a list of places to get those shoes/similar shoes.

I should be able to buy the shoes.

Unique value proposition

Manifestation of the brand in the form of an interactive character.

Access to an aspirational stylist guide to make buying shoes a personal shopping experience.

Unfair advantage

Obsessive focus on shoes.

Market understanding.

Exceptionally compelling brand.

Audience segments

1) Female 25-30 year olds, disposable income, professionals, likely to spend £150 on shoes, not £500.

2) Female 18-25 year olds, some disposable income, career starters, likely to spend £60 on shoes, not £150.

3) Female 30-35 year olds, established sense of style, other priorities to balance with shoe purchases.

Key metrics

Interactions (with Maddie)
Show propensity to buy
Returning visits
Revenue

Competitors

- * Net-A-Porter
- * Shopstyle
- * SnapFashion
- * Pounce
- * Stylect

Channels

- * Paid reviews / tie-ups
- * Social media
- * Natural search
- * PPC / retargeted ads
- * Buy email lists?

SIMON

Cost structure

Marketing
Matching technology (with scale)
App development (with scale)

Revenue streams

Affiliate sales
Advertising
Sponsored product (E.g. PPC)
Freemium subs model?